TERRIBLE TALES.

The Awful Experiences of Greely and His Comrades.

Sailors' Stories of the Finding of the Dead Bodies, Which Were Badly Mutilated and Bore Evidence of Having Been Breakfasted on by Cannibals—The Officers of the Relief Boats Still Very Reluctant.

By Telegram to the Post-Dispatch.

New York, August 13.—The story of cannibalism among the survivors of the Greely Arctic Expedition caused thousands of men and women to visit the Brooklyn Navy Yard to learn for themselves the truth or falsity of the story. On board the Thetis every man seemed determined to keep his mouth shut about the large iron tank in which the dead bodies of the heroes were so long concealed. A knot of sailors had gathered. They were more communicative than their superiors, but few of them knew anything of importance. All had seen the bodies of the dead, but only after blankets had been draped about them. The remains lay for ten days on the deck of the Thetis before they were put in the alcohol tanks. Every sailor on board the fleet was questioned concerning the condition of the bodies. Most of them were willing to talk and there seemed to be no restriction placed on their lips. But they could not tell much, because they had not seen the bodies undressed. An honest looking German was pointed out on the Thetis as the seaman who had accompanied the officers to the graves. His name was Huijzen. Not knowing that he was being interviewed, he told the story of the finding of the bodies in a way that was conviction with it. The conversation had drifted to the hardships endured by Greely's men, and this leading up to the finding of the bodies at Cape Sabine. "The sailors said it was Second Lieutenant Colville who stood by me as I dug up the bodies. He and one other officer and myself were the only ones that left the boat to go to the graves. You know how we found the live men lying under a spread of cold canvas too weak to lift up the flaps. They could only crawl on their hands and knees. Well, I didn't see them for some time after they were taken on board."

AND CAN'T TELL MUCH about them, but I do know something about the bodies. As I was saying, the boat's crew took us up close to the little hill where the bodies lay and we three went over to get them. I had my shovel with me, but the first thing I saw was a naked corpse lying right out of the ground. On the calf of the leg and on the thigh there were deep cuts as though a sailor's sheath knife had carved away the flesh. The skin was drawn tightly over the rest of the body, as even in the places where the cuts were not much flesh had been taken away. The man was too much of a skeleton, too much wasted to have yielded more than half an inch of flesh on any part of his body. The cuts looked as though some person had made a hasty cut on what were once the sides of the body. The slashes were from eight inches long and three inches wide. There were, on both legs and - thighs, four cuts in all. Altogether there could not have been more than two or three pounds of meat taken from the corpses. The places where the flesh had been torn away had turned a yellowish black, but did not differ very much from the color of the skin. The man's face was drawn and haggard, the cheek bones stood out like an Indian's, and the abdomen had fallen in. It was the awfullest corpse I ever saw or want to see, I can tell you. We three stood there looking at it for some time. Of course I wasn't my place to say anything, and I kept my mouth shut. Lieut. Colville was the first to say a word. He sent me back for some blankets, as I dropped my shovel and hurried away. When I got back with the blankets there were the other naked bodies lying side by side with the first. The first body had been found. I began to think that my shovel would not be needed."

"Then these corpses had never been buried?"

"Buried? No. They had been stripped of their clothes as soon as they died and left naked on the ground. Some of the FLESH HAD BEEN CUT AWAY from the arms and shoulders. The cuts were rough and jagged, as though done at night and at a time when the cannibal had to trust to his sense of feeling. Long shreds were stripped from the legs in regular strips, suggesting the thought that the man had been plunged in, and then the fingers had torn away what remained of the flesh. It was awful," and the rough sailor shuddered and took another chew as he recalled the scene. "Well we wrapped what remained of the corpses in the blankets and went on a few steps, where we found graves. With the shovel I scraped off the thin layer of sand and brought to light the remains of the other nine men. These had been buried in their clothes just as they had died. A bag covered each one and by the names written on them we learned the names of the men. They were taken to the ships, wrapped in other blankets, and finally preserved in alcohol."

We did not know whether these bodies had been mutilated, and knew nothing of the four that had drifted out to sea. Down in the hold a member of the crew was found who had talked with one of the survivors. Other sailors declared that the survivors were close-mouthed and would tell very little of the sufferings they endured. But he seemed to have gained the confidence of one of the unfortunates while nursing him. The story of the SHOOTING OF YOUNG CHARLES R. HENRY, a private who was buried a few weeks ago at Cypress Hill, was briefly told: "When the game grew very scarce, early last June, Greely called his men together and with them took account of the stock of food on hand. There were only a few days' rations, and these were equally divided. It was necessary to make an example, and besides, with one man out of the way, there would be one mouth less to fill, so with one voice the poor fellow was condemned to die. He was shot in the head and breast, and it was claimed that when the body was found the head was missing. The coffin buried at Cypress Hill contained only a headless trunk. Such is the outline of the story told. The officers maintained a discreet silence. Ensigns Harlow and Chambers would say nothing on the subject of cannibalism and surgeon Ames referred the question to COMMANDER SCHLEY. The commander at first declined to say a word either in confirmation or denial of the report. "It can do no good," he said, bringing down his fist on the table. "It can do no good to drag the sufferings of this band of heroes into the papers. Talk of the feelings of the survivors. Consider the sensation of the relatives of the dead. I deny most emphatically that the bones of these men were stripped of flesh and I deny ever having sent a communication saying so to Washington. That report is in the hands of the proper authorities, and if they see fit to make it public, very well. I will say to you, however, that if the survivors of the party ate the flesh of their dead comrades I know nothing about it whatever. But, did I know of anything of the kind having been done, I should refuse to gratify a morbid curiosity and create a sensation out of the sad misfortune of these men by disclosing any knowledge to any but the proper authorities. Men in such a situation lose their reason and are not surely human beings. Starvation reduces men to brute prey rapidly and they will resort to means of sustaining life which to us would seem appalling. If you and I were reduced to such a strait that we must eat the other or both die, then it is proper that only the fittest should survive."

Commander Schley slapped his hand upon the chart table, shut his mouth and turned away.

LIEUTENANT COLVILLE, second in command of the Bear, refused to make any statement, either affirming or denying the story.

Second Lieutenant Colville turned to the reporter who questioned him about the matter and said: "I decline to answer."

"The men on the Thetis say that they exhumed the bodies and that they were in a terribly emaciated condition to say the least, some of them not weighing more than 70 pounds."

"I dig those bodies up myself. No seaman assisted me. Only one person aided me, and that person was an officer. I discovered the bodies buried under the gravel and we dug them up, wrapped them in blankets and gave them to the sailors to carry down to the boats."

"Then you would know if the flesh had been cut from the bones for the purpose of food?"

"Again I must decline to answer. You want to know entirely too much."

Dr. Ames, surgeon of the Bear, attended the sick in company with Dr. Grace of the Thetis. He declined in every particular the story that the dead had been devoured.

Tom Maloney, a young sailor of the Thetis, who has been very intimate with the sailors on the voyage home, declared that he saw nothing of cannibalism among the Greely crew, and he was one of those who were sent to bring the dead aboard the vessel from Cape Sabine.

"Yes," remarked Seaman Taylor, breaking into the conversation, "I was with Maloney on that trip, and he and I took the bodies to the ship. The flesh was very much shriveled up. Where the gravel had blown off of one body the toes were exposed. They were like skeleton's toes. We had tried to carry the bodies down carefully but two of the men slipped in climbing down and they let the body of Lieut. Killigbury fall and the body was broken. That's all the scolding that I heard of. However, I am in the service yet and can't say much. Maybe in ten days, when I get my discharge, I may say more."

The non-committal attitude of all the subordinates officers is pointed out as confirming the report that

THE STARTING WRITINGS did feed upon their brothers, but it is generally conceded that this was not done publicly. If done at all it was in the darkness of night, that, craved with hunger, the starving unfortunates crept, knife in hand, toward the frozen corpses. It was when no eyes could see them, when the awful deed was hidden from even their own sight, that they tore the flesh from the limbs and devoured it half raw. There was no comparison in this journey's feeding. Every hungry wretch cast his eyes to the mute testimony of mutilated bodies. No man could say he had seen his friend eat of that flesh. It was one vagrant of a wild madness and should be forgotten with the passing of that madness.

UNEASY REPUBLICANS.

Blaine To Visit the New York Headquarters—Conkling's Apathy.

By Telegram to the Post-Dispatch.

New York, August 13.—James G. Blaine will arrive here Wednesday next to deal direct with John G. Conkling and to attempt a reconciliation with Roscoe Conkling. The fact that John G. O'Brien had stubbornly refused to begin his New York City campaign until he could have a personal conference with Mr. Blaine, has caused more or less uneasiness at the Republican headquarters. Mr. O'Brien and Messrs. Higier and Wheeler have declared for Blaine very much as Tammany has declared for Cleveland and Hendricks, but a plain, straightforward man, seeking to serve the best interests of the people of Missouri, a choice, Mr. O'Brien of Mr. Gannaway for Mr. Marmaduke's nomination was made unanimous. Delegates Park, Lee, Latashaw, Rose and Ed Butler were appointed a committee to escort the nominee to the convention. General Marmaduke, who was greeted with prolonged applause, addressed the meeting as follows:

"GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION—I entered into this campaign with an honest and earnest purpose, asking the people of Missouri to nominate me for Governor. A delegate: 'They have done it.' [Cheering and laughter.]

Gen. Marmaduke continued: "Yes, they have done it. This is not my victory. It is the people's victory. The people have made this estimate of me, that I am an honest man. I hope to be a plain, straightforward, sensible Executive, to take care of all the interests of the people of Missouri. Republican and Democrat, white and black, I do not intend to prove loyal or extraordinary as an Executive, but as a plain, straightforward man, seeking to serve the best interests of the people of Missouri, a choice, Mr. O'Brien of Mr. Gannaway for Mr. Marmaduke's nomination was made unanimous. General Marmaduke, who was greeted with prolonged applause, addressed the meeting as follows:

"GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION—I entered into this campaign with an honest and earnest purpose, asking the people of Missouri to nominate me for Governor. A delegate: 'They have done it.' [Cheering and laughter.]

Gen. Marmaduke continued: "Yes, they have done it. This is not my victory. It is the people's victory. The people have made this estimate of me, that I am an honest man. I hope to be a plain, straightforward, sensible Executive, to take care of all the interests of the people of Missouri. Republican and Democrat, white and black, I do not intend to prove loyal or extraordinary as an Executive, but as a plain, straightforward man, seeking to serve the best interests of the people of Missouri, a choice, Mr. O'Brien of Mr. Gannaway for Mr. Marmaduke's nomination was made unanimous. Origin of Ammonia.
Ammonia is obtained in large quantities by the putrefaction of the urine of animals.—Encyclopedia Britannica.

Every housekeeper can test baking powders containing this disgusting drug by placing a can of the Royal or "Andrews" brand in a bowl of water, and stew until heated, then remove the cover and stop.

Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder does not contain Ammonia, Alum, Lime, Potash, Bone Phosphates. Prove it by the above test. It is prepared by a Physician and contains a special regard to cleanliness and healthfulness.

$15,000 for Cleanliness.
Chairman Stein provided over the meeting of the Ways and Means Committee last night. The ordinance proposing to spend $15,000 for sanitary purposes was discussed. Judge Terry opposed the appropriation on the ground that it was not necessary,
and that if necessary the amount was insufficient.
The emergency clause was stricken out, and the bill passed the committee by a vote of three to one, the one nay being Judge Terry. Other business accomplished was entirely routine.

At the southwestern corner of the Four Courts
block is located a low, castled building whose windowless walls command the attention of every passing pedestrian. The monotony of the blind front is broken by a large sign, the letters of which
stand in relief from the block of sand stone
and notifying the curious that the old building is the "Morgue." Though by no means devoid of architectural beauty, the building is a relic of
the past, and its walls command every passing eye
the morbid curiosity that enhances the morbid
character of the scenes which are enacted within
its walls.

the "Morgue." Though by no means devoid of architectural beauty, the building is a relic of
the past, and its walls command every passing eye
the morbid curiosity that enhances the morbid
character of the scenes which are enacted within
its walls.

At the southwestern corner of the Four Courts
block is located a low, castled building whose
windowless walls command the attention of every
passing pedestrian. The monotony of the blind
front is broken by a large sign, the letters of which
stand in relief from the block of sand stone
and notifying the curious that the old building is
the "Morgue." Though by no means devoid of
